TRUMP VOWS APPEAL UP TO SUPREME COURT

1 A defiant President Donald Trump has pledged to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary to fight for his revised travel ban, parts of which were halted by two different federal judges in recent days. The legal path forward will be challenging, though, as lawsuits work their way through federal courts on opposite sides of the country, in Hawaii and Maryland, as well as in Washington state, where a judge may rule soon on another challenge to the new ban. The Justice Department's first step would likely be filing an appeal in either or both of the cases, an action likely to come within days. Justice Department spokeswoman Sarah Isgur Flores declined to comment on the administration's intentions. REUTERS

$27M DRIVER SETTLEMENT IN LYFT LAWSUIT

2 A U.S. judge gave the final approval to a settlement agreement in a class-action lawsuit against Lyft, ending a legal case that challenged the independent contractor status of the company's drivers. U.S. District Judge Vince Chhabria in San Francisco gave his approval to the $27 million settlement, after granting preliminary approval in June. The judge had previously rejected a $12.25 million settlement offer because it "short-changed" drivers. Lyft drivers in California had sued the company, arguing they should be classified as employees and therefore be entitled to reimbursement for expenses, including gasoline and vehicle maintenance. Drivers pay those costs themselves. In his order, Chhabria cautioned that "The agreement is not perfect." REUTERS

MERKEL LOOKING FORWARD TO MEETING

3 German Chancellor Angela Merkel told a newspaper she was looking forward to meeting President Donald Trump in Washington on Friday. "It's always better to talk with each other than about each other," Merkel told regional newspaper Saarbruecker Zeitung. Asked if both sides were curious, Merkel said: "There's definitely curiosity. And also pleasure at meeting each other. At least from my side." Merkel said she wanted to speak with Trump, who was elected in November, about security and economic issues as well as about future international cooperation. REUTERS

YOUTUBE STRIKE DEAL WITH E-SPORTS PLATFORM

4 Alphabet Inc.'s YouTube is doubling down on the lucrative business of competitive gaming, where players square off on virtual games for big prize money in tournaments. The video site made its biggest investment in the business to date, signing a multiyear deal with e-sports platform FACEIT to stream its competitive gaming league, the Esports Championship Series. E-sports has been touted as one of the next big things in live events, drawing millions of spectators online. Traditional media companies and big videogame publishers are all clamoring for a bigger part of the stakes. FACEIT, one of the largest e-sports platforms in the world, teamed up with Amazon.com Inc's Twitch last year to launch ECS. The gaming website had streamed the league's first two seasons last year. The life of rapper Meek Mill ain't easy. In between playing shows and cutting records, he's also literally fighting off overeager fans. Two fans approached him in the St. Louis airport after a concert Wednesday night demanding photos, and it ended in a scuffle that earned all three men criminal summonses. It's unclear if the incident violates Meek's probation in Philadelphia, but he beat down rumors of his arrest with Instagram photos showing him living the high life after the incident. Meals on Wheels could suffer drastic cuts under Trump's budget plan

The organization, which delivers meals to more than two million homebound seniors, is in danger of losing funding.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

A Meals on Wheels driver delivers a meal to an elderly woman. President Trump's budget blueprint calls for slashing funds to programs like Meals on Wheels. GETTY IMAGES Feeding elderly, mostly homebound Americans wouldn't appear to be a very controversial program.

But on Thursday, Meals on Wheels found itself caught in the crosshairs of President Donald Trump's proposed federal budget.

The president's plan would boost military and homeland security while taking a hatchet to domestic spending. Areas that would suffer deep cuts include the environment, the arts, science and anti-poverty programs.

Case in point: Meals on Wheels, the nationwide charity that delivers more than 200 million meals a year to 2.4 million elderly and infirm Americans.

It could be sharply curtailed if Trump's proposed elimination of the $3 billion Community Development Block Grants fund takes effect. The funding comes out of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Meals on Wheels of America president and CEO Ellie Hollander said while the organization could not know the exact impact the cuts would have, any decrease "would be a devastating blow to our ability to provide much-needed care for millions of vulnerable seniors in America." Hollander said the work the organization does saves billions of dollars in reduced health care expenses.

The organization claims its services decrease the rate of falls, which would cost the nation $34 billion a year.

In a news conference on Thursday, Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney told reporters that the Community Development Block Grant Program, was "just not showing results" and its programs "don't work."

Multiple types of Meals on Wheels programs exist around the country, not all of which rely exclusively on federal funding.

Citymeals on Wheels in New York City delivers more than two million meals a year to more than 18,000 of New York's homebound and elderly, funded by donations and a public/private partnership with the city Department for the Aging.

Meals on Wheels of America said every federal dollar it receives is matched by about $3 from other sources. But cuts in funding overall have reduced the number of meals the organization provides by 23 million since 2005.

In Philadelphia, numerous Meals on Wheels programs provide people with food around the region. The Philadelphia Corporation for the Aging (PCA) alone feeds about 6,000 people.

PCA gets 85 percent of its funding from Pennsylvania, and 15 percent from federal funding, or roughly 50 cents per meal, said president and CEO Holly Lange. Even if the proposed cuts go through, Lange said she will fight to maintain the program.

"I would never cut meals," Lange said. "My board cannot allow an older person to go hungry. I would find something else to cut."

"Philadelphia has a big poverty problem and a big food insecurity program," she continued. "We are the largest provider of meals in the city except the school district, so any cuts to that program would be devastating."

Trump's budget cuts draw Republican scorn

President Donald Trump's first budget outline, calling for a security-heavy realignment of federal spending, drew resistance on Thursday from his fellow Republicans in Congress as many balked at proposed deep cuts to diplomatic and foreign aid programs.

Conservatives have plenty to like in the White House plan, with its 10 percent increase in military spending next year and beefed-up funding to help deport more illegal immigrants and build a wall on the border with Mexico.

It also takes steps to downsize government, a central goal of conservatives.

But the gaze into Trump's priorities for the next four years proved too savage for many Republicans' taste, foreshadowing an intense battle between Congress and the White House over spending in coming months.

Although Republicans control both the Senate and House of Representatives, Congress holds the federal purse strings and seldom approves presidents' budget plans.

The administration asked Congress for a 28 percent, or $10.9 billion, cut in State Department funding and other international programs to help pay for a 10 percent, $54 billion hike in military spending next year.

"These increases in defense come at the expense of national security," said Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham, who has not hesitated to take on Trump. Republican Sen. Marco Rubio, who like Graham ran unsuccessfully for president in 2016, leveled similar sentiments, as did some prominent Republicans in the House of Representatives.

The White House shrugged off concerns about the impact, saying Trump was making good on election promises.

Temple drops proposal to jack up price of student meal plan

The mayor criticized university's attempt to link the cost hike to the city's soda tax.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Temple University hastily reversed course on declaring that Philadelphia's soda tax would force it to raise the price of its student meal plan after receiving a scolding from City Hall.

"The city and Mayor Kenney have appropriately raised valid concerns about the accuracy of the numbers related to the impact of the soda tax on Temple students," university spokesman Ray Betzner said in a statement. "The university will review the calculation and impact of the soda tax before enacting the meal plan fee for the coming year."

Mayor Jim Kenney's spokeswoman Lauren Hitt praised the change of course, saying the mayor commended Temple for "deciding not bend to pressure from the soda industry and acting in the best interests of their students and all the children of Philadelphia."

Temple's board had announced earlier this week that the total cost of Philly's 1.5-cent-per-ounce sweetened drinks tax would add $400,000 to expenses to its room and board plan. It said the tax would result in a 4.8 percent cost-hike for students on the plan, the Inquirer reported.

But the mayor's office strongly disagreed. At the time, Hitt accused the school of using the soda tax as a "scapegoat."

She pointed to Temple's finances and plans as proof of her claims.

"Temple's own administration staff has grown by 40 percent in recent years; they are planning to build a multimillion-dollar stadium; their new 24-story dorm includes flat-screen TVs; and, sure enough, they have a history of raising their meal-plan fees to cover those costs — by 2.5 percent in 2015 and 4.3 percent in 2014," she said.

In announcing the change of course a day after Hitt's rebuke, Temple stressed that it supports the soda tax, which Kenney has championed as a funding mechanism for universal pre-K and Philly Rebuild.

"We want to make it clear that the university enthusiastically supports the mayor's program to expand quality pre-K opportunities for children in Philadelphia," Temple said. "This critically important program is already providing benefits to approximately 1,800 children from every neighborhood, and its objective is directly in line with Temple's mission to make a quality education accessible to every child."

But Temple stood by its assertion that the soda tax will add an estimated $68 per student to the cost of providing a student meal plan, whether or not students drink soda and other sweetened drinks.

"The university will review the calculation and impact of the soda tax before enacting the meal plan fee for the coming year."

Hit-and-run driver's sentence bittersweet ending to South Philly family tragedy

Christopher Cook pleaded guilty to striking and killing Theresa Pozzi with his pickup truck, with the sentence carrying a maximum term of three years in prison.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Theresa Pozzi died on Christmas Eve in 2014, the victim of a hit-and-run driver. Her family never expected to find justice.

But nearly two years later, authorities arrested a 43-year-old man, who eventually pleaded guilty to homicide by vehicle.

On Feb. 28 the man, Christopher Cook, was sentenced to 1½ to three years in prison, plus seven years probation.

Pozzi's family said they had accepted the sentence, granted in exchange for a negotiated guilty plea.

"My mother figured that if any of the 12 people on the jury didn't believe it, he would walk free that day," said Theresa's sister, Marie Pozzi. "My mother could not see that. No amount of time would ever bring her back."

With time served, Cook, 44, could be released in a year.

His record includes previous guilty pleas to assault in 2004 and drunk driving in 2003 and 2005, according to court records.

Theresa Pozzi, 33, of South Philly, was walking to a bus stop on State Road in Northeast Philly that December night when she was struck by Cook, who was driving a tow truck. The impact threw her across the street.

Anna Pozzi, center, hugs Simonetta Lein, as sister Maria Pozzi looks on, shortly after the hit-and-run driver who killed Anna's daughter Theresa, Christopher Cook, was arrested and charged. RANDI FAIR

Inset: Christopher Cook PPD

Police only had a piece of a headlight and a brief snatch of surveillance video showing the vehicle as evidence.

But then in fall 2015, Simonetta Lein, founder of the Wishwall Foundation, met the Pozzis after having put up the first ever Wishwall in the Italian Market during Pope Francis' visit to Philadelphia.

After reading the family's wish to find Theresa's killer, Lein arranged for an illuminated billboard to be set up over the scene of the accident, asking witnesses to come forward.

The family's street was also renamed "Theresa Pozzi Way" with the aid of Councilman Mark Squilla.

Ten months later, in what the family hailed as a "miracle," police received tips leading them to charge Cook with Pozzi's death.

Lein, who was happy that Cook was finally caught, did not agree with the sentence.

"It's crazy that he only got 1½ to three years," she said. "I don't understand the justice system. But at least he's in jail."

White House says President Trump stands by claim Obama wiretapped him

The top Republican in Congress, House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan, on Thursday added his voice to those saying there was no sign of a wiretap.

President Donald Trump stands by his accusation that the Obama administration tapped his phones during the 2016 presidential campaign, the White House said on Thursday, despite three senior lawmakers rejecting Trump's claim.

The Republican and Democratic leaders of the Senate Intelligence Committee said in a statement they saw "no indications" of surveillance at Trump Tower in New York as the president claimed in Twitter posts on March 4.

"Based on the information available to us, we see no indications that Trump Tower was the subject of surveillance by any element of the United States government either before or after Election Day 2016," Republican Chairman Richard Burr and Senator Mark Warner, the committee's Democratic vice chairman, said in a statement.

White House spokesman Sean Spicer forcefully defended Trump's assertion during a briefing, citing media reports that have discussed intelligence collection on possible contacts between Trump associates and Russia in the campaign.

"There is no question that there were surveillance techniques used throughout this," Spicer said.

When pressed for further evidence, Spicer chastised the media for focusing so much attention on comments disparaging Trump's claim about surveillance. He said reporters have not focused enough on comments from officials denying evidence of any collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign.

The Russian government has rejected an accusation by U.S. intelligence agencies that it worked to influence the election in Trump's favor by hacking computer systems, among other methods.

House Speaker Ryan told reporters: "The point is, the intelligence committees in their continuing, widening, ongoing investigation of all things Russia, got to the bottom — at least so far — with respect to our intelligence community that — that no such wiretap existed."

An official familiar with the investigations by Congress and intelligence and law enforcement agencies said investigators have looked as aggressively and thoroughly as they can for evidence of any spying on Trump or his associates but have found none.

President Donald Trump and House Speaker Paul Ryan GETTY IMAGES

Trump, a Republican, made the accusation six weeks after he took over the presidency from Democrat Barack Obama.

Trump accused Obama of wiretapping him during the late stages of the campaign, but provided no evidence. Obama said through a spokesman that it was "simply false."

"How low has President Obama gone to tapp my phones during the very sacred election process. This is Nixon/Watergate. Bad (or sick) guy!," Trump wrote.

At least four congressional committees added the startling accusation in their investigations of possible Russian meddling in the election campaign and Russian ties to Trump and his associates.

On Wednesday, House of Representatives Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes, a Republican, and top Democrat Adam Schiff told reporters they had seen no evidence that Trump Tower was tapped and said they would ask Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey about the issue during a public hearing on Monday.

Ryan told reporters he received the same intelligence briefing as Nunes and Schiff. REUTERS

DISMANTLING OBAMACARE? NOT SO FAST

Opinion

As surely as your microwave oven is secretly posting pictures on the Internet of you in your Scooby Doo pajamas, Congressional Republicans love the idea of repealing Obamacare. When Barack Obama was in office, they voted dozens of times to do it even with the knowledge he'd never let them complete the task. Yet now, with the Oval Office, the Senate, and the House of Representatives firmly in their hands the task suddenly seems — if not impossible — at least a lot more difficult than the GOPers once imagined.

This is not because of Democratic opposition. Let's be honest, the last election reduced the Dems to paper tigers — all spits and hissing, but no bite. No, the problem is Republicans are pushing back like a bunch of pensioners at a buffet line.

Moderate Repubs are quaking over the Congressional Budget Office report which shows their "repeal and replace" plan could leave 24 million uninsured by 2026. Considering how many older (read: sicker) voters wave the GOP flag, that could be risky. Those folks may rail against government handouts, but when it comes time to pay for expensive meds, many would like Uncle Sam to pitch in a few bucks, and they can be hell on any legislator who gets in the way.

Hard right wingers, on the other hand, are worried the new proposal is far too generous. They're calling it nasty names like "Obamacare lite," "Ryancare" (after Speaker of the House, Paul Ryan,) and "Claire Danes." (No, not really. But as actresses go, she's pretty polarizing, so you never know …)

And then there are Repubs in the middle who want to support party unity, take a whack at the Obama legacy, and appear thoughtful and compassionate all at once. They're pretty much screwed.

Indeed, their whole gang is rapidly getting into trouble with this issue. Because what it will take to get any one faction on board, will almost certainly push the others farther out to sea. And if they can't find a way to unite, almost unbelievably — they could end up letting Obamacare, the program they hate like no other, sail right on.

Al Qaeda operative guilty in deaths of US servicemen, bomb plot

A Saudi Arabia-born man was convicted on Thursday of participating in a 2003 attack in Afghanistan that killed two U.S. servicemen and plotting to bomb a U.S. embassy in West Africa, federal prosecutors in Brooklyn said.

A jury found Ibrahim Suleiman Adnan Adam Harun, known by the nom de guerre Spin Ghul, guilty of all counts after only two hours of deliberations. He faces life in prison at his sentencing.

Harun was not present in court for the trial. Since his extradition from Italy in October 2012, he has insisted he is a "warrior" who should face a military tribunal rather than criminal proceedings.

Before one court appearance in May, Harun struggled with U.S. marshals and ripped off his clothes in an effort to avoid coming to court. U.S. District Judge Brian Cogan has allowed Harun to observe the proceedings from a jail cell.

As of the start of his trial 10 days ago, Harun had not spoken with his court-appointed defense lawyers for two years.

Prosecutors used Harun's own words against him during the trial, playing recordings taken in Italy after his capture in which he described how he dreamed of joining "jihad" as a young boy.

"The defendant embraced terrorism at a young age and made it his life's work," Assistant U.S. Attorney Matt Jacobs said in his opening statement.

Harun, who claims Niger citizenship, traveled to Afghanistan to join al Qaeda weeks before the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, on U.S. soil, prosecutors said.

After receiving extensive arms training, Harun fled with other fighters to the mountainous region along the Pakistan border.

In 2003, he took part in an assault on U.S. troops in 2003 that killed Army Private 1st Class Jerod Dennis, 19, and Air Force Airman 1st Class Raymond Losano, 24, prosecutors said. A Koran recovered from the site bore Harun's fingerprints.

Gunning for profit: Firearm makers among the top short trades under Trump Fears of gun control following mass shootings, along with concerns a win by Democrats in the November polls could usher in more firearm restrictions, led to record U.S. gun sales last year and propelled firearm stocks to all-time highs.

Gun owners were thrilled with Donald Trump's election in November. So were short sellers of gun stocks.

Trump's surprise victory on Nov. 8 turned gunmaker shares, one of the most profitable investments under his predecessor, Democrat Barack Obama, into a top moneymaker for traders who take a gamble on falling stock prices.

Shares of firearms makers Sturm Ruger & Company, American Outdoor Brands Corp. and Vista Outdoor Inc. are down by between 17 percent and 47 percent since Election Day.

From Obama's inauguration in January 2009 through Trump's election victory, Sturm Ruger shares delivered a total return, including reinvested dividends, of 1,315 percent, while American Outdoor Brands, formerly known as Smith & Wesson, returned nearly 1,060 percent. Vista Outdoor had risen 14 percent since its market debut in January 2015.

But the victory of Republican candidate Trump, who opposes regulations on gun ownership, abruptly undercut demand as people became less worried the government would curtail their ability to purchase firearms.

The steep drop in guns sales threw gunmakers' shares into free-fall, and privately held Remington, which has been making firearms since 1816, this month laid off 122 workers from its factory in Ilion, New York.

Targets and racks of guns at a gun shop in Merrimack, N.H. GETTY IMAGES

While bets that Trump will cut corporate taxes and slash financial regulation have sent the S&P 500 up 11 percent since the election to record highs, short sellers targeting gun stocks have reaped even richer rewards.

Vista Outdoor gets about half of its revenue from selling guns and ammunition, and a 47 percent slump in its shares since the election puts it at the bottom of a list of more than 2,000 U.S. companies valued at $1 billion or more, according to Thomson Reuters data.

Short sellers have counted nearly $200 million of paper profit betting against American Outdoor Brands and Vista Outdoor over the past four months, and some traders have recently moved out of those stocks and into rival gunmaker Sturm Ruger, according to S3 Partners, a financial analytics firm.

Sturm Ruger's stock has fallen less than its peers in recent months, making it more attractive to short sellers betting the industry downturn is far from over, said S3 Partners' head of research, Ihor Dusaniwsky. A 9 percent recovery in Sturm Ruger in the past week has left its stock down 17 percent since the election.

"Traders think American Outdoor and Vista have hit their targets, and now they're reallocating some of their short assets to Sturm Ruger, thinking that it will catch up to the other two," Dusaniwsky said.

After sales "took a nosedive" around Thanksgiving, it may take three quarters for gun owners to use up ammunition they stockpiled before the election and return to normal buying, Vista Outdoors Chief Financial Officer Stephen Nolan told analysts at an event on Tuesday.

Short-sellers borrow and then sell stocks they think will fall in value, hoping to profit by buying the stock back more cheaply later on and then returning it to its owner.

Short interest in Sturm Ruger & Company in late March rose to 30 percent of its outstanding shares, its highest since 2013. But with most available shares of Sturm Ruger already shorted, traders are paying interest rates as high as 23 percent to borrow new shares, according to Astec Analytics. REUTERS

Car industry players diverge on timescale for self-driving cars

Carmakers and suppliers gave widely differing timelines for the introduction of self-driving vehicles on Thursday, showing the uncertainties surrounding the technology as well as a split between cautious established players and bullish new entrants.

Chipmaker Nvidia, facing direct competition with the world's top chipmaker after Intel's $15 billion deal to buy autonomous driving technology firm Mobileye this week, gave the most optimistic predictions.

Chief Executive Jen-Hsun Huang forecast carmakers may speed up their plans in the light of technological advances and that fully self-driving cars could be on the road by 2025.

"Because of deep learning, because of AI [artificial intelligence] computing, we've really supercharged our road map to autonomous vehicles," he said in a keynote speech to the Bosch Connected World conference in Berlin.

Bosch CEO Volkmar Denner
GETTY IMAGES

Germany's Bosch, however, the world's biggest automotive supplier, gave a timetable as much as six years longer to get to the final stage before fully autonomous vehicles, and declined even to forecast when a totally self-driving car might take to the streets.

> "Of course, we still have to prove that an autonomous car does better in driving and has less accidents than a human being."
> Denner

Progress is fraught by issues including who is liable when a self-driving car has an accident, bringing down the costs of sensor technology and guarding against hacking.

"Of course, we still have to prove that an autonomous car does better in driving and has less accidents than a human being," Bosch CEO Volkmar Denner told a news conference.

Nvidia has applied its market-leading expertise in high-end computer graphics to the intense visualization and simulation needs of autonomous cars, and has been working on artificial intelligence — teaching computers to learn to write their own software code — for a decade.

"No human could write enough code to capture the vast diversity and complexity that we do so easily, called driving," said Huang.

Together with Bosch executives, Huang presented a prototype AI on-board computer that is expected to go into production by the beginning of the next decade. The computer will use Nvidia's processing power to interpret data gathered by Bosch sensors. REUTERS

Dan Stevens and Emma Watson star in "Beauty and the Beast." DISNEY

The magic of "Beauty and the Beast" gets an update in Disney's live-action remake.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

Call it a cliche, but Disney movies have a certain magic about them. How else do you explain classically trained British actress Gugu Mbatha-Raw giggling delightedly when discussing being transformed into the feather duster Plumette for the new live-action remake of "Beauty and the Beast"?

It's a departure for the actress, who's made her name in tougher fare like the abolitionist period film "Belle," Matthew McConaughey's Confederate rebellion drama "Free State of Jones" and the upcoming "Miss Sloane" with Jessica Chastain about the seedy world of lobbyists.

While it's no issue film, the animated "Beauty and the Beast" was revolutionary in its own ways back in 1991. It's perhaps the only Disney movie where the heroine (Emma Watson) rescues the prince (Dan Stevens). And despite being household objects, the supporting cast are hardly mere window dressing — as the dove-like feather duster, Mbatha-Raw got a true love story too, with Ewan McGregor's candelabra, Lumiere.

We talked to the 33-year-old actress about childhood dreams and the controversy over Disney's first openly gay character.

You grew up in England; are Disney movies as influential there as in the States?

Oh, absolutely. Disney has a global impact and for me, certainly. When I was 8 years old, it became my favorite Disney movie. I was obsessed with it. I knew all the words to all the songs, I had the cassette tape and listened to it in my mum's car — I don't know if she sang along, but I certainly did.

Plumette and Lumiere

GETTY IMAGES

What made it your favorite?

I was really inspired by that idea of beauty coming from within, which is an oldie but a goodie. I loved Belle as a heroine — I also grew up in a small town [Oxfordshire] and I always knew there was more out there. I didn't always feel like I fitted in where I grew up, so I related to Belle on that level, and also the fact that she reads books and she knows her own mind. She's a really cool heroine.

How does the audition to be a feather duster work?

I was really fortunate enough to be offered the part, which was very exciting. When I got the call from my agent I squealed down the phone. That 8-year-old inside of me was so excited on my behalf. It was a real honor, and this cast is so amazing.

Unlike in most animated films, you actually got to act with your fellow castmates.

The first time I met Ewan McGregor was actually in dance rehearsal, we had a class to learn the dance for the final ballroom number. So that was a great icebreaker, to dance with somebody, because when we went off to record all of our vocal work solo in a recording studio just with a sound engineer and [director] Bill Condon.

The film has come into some controversy after revealing that Josh Gad's LeFou, the sidekick to Gaston, will be Disney's first openly gay character. Do you think art has a responsibility to reflect the real world?

Absolutely, and I think that that was Bill Condon's intention to make a "Beauty and the Beast" for 2017. I'm proud and psyched to be associated with a movie that celebrates diversity and celebrates love in all its forms to reflect the world we live in today.

Garance Marillier plays a college freshman who gets really into eating human flesh in the French/Belgian "Raw." FOCUS WORLD

"Raw"

Director: Julia Ducournau
Stars: Garance Marillier, Ella Rumpf
Rating: R

You've never seen someone eat food with as much love as when the hero of "Raw" gnaws on her sister's severed finger. This French/Belgian shocker arrives in America riding a wave of superlatives. It's the feminist cannibal movie that caused viewers to run for the aisles at Cannes! But it's also easy to pigeonhole.Indeed, it's as much a character study and a coming-of-age saga as it is a gore fest. When young collegiate Justine (Garance Marillier) first chows on human flesh, it's sensual and transcendent, not just bloody and disgusting.

Arriving at the veterinary school that schooled her parents and currently her older, brusquer sister Alexia (Ella Rumpf), Justine — shy, curious, vegetarian — is thrust into a sadistically creative hazing week, where being doused in horse blood is only the beginning. It's being forced to eat raw rabbit kidneys that pushes her over the edge. All of a sudden Justine is stealing beef patties from the cafeteria, looking like a sweaty, crazy-eyed addict out for her next score. But it's not till she accidentally slices off one of Alexia's digits that she realizes mere animal meat won't do.

From here, "Raw" could have easily turned into a slasher; Justine has an entire campus of bodies at her disposal! Instead it offers less-expected twists, staying driven by character more than by plot or the next nasty bit. Deep down is a story about a young woman discovering her body — and, thanks to the presence of a female filmmaker (Julia Ducournau), not in the usual male-gaze-y way. That's not all Justine finds: In slavery to her disease, she learns individuality, and at a time when she's supposed to conform to the typically hedonistic freshman year experience.

"Raw" goes to many weird places, but with a great sense of humor. It contains its own, far wilder version of the waxing scene in "The 40-Year-Old Virgin," plus an insta-classic fight that includes the taunt "You taste like s—." (Imagine Bette Davis saying it to Joan Crawford.) Come for the flesh eating, stay for the empathetic portrayal of autonomy through transgression. MATT PRIGGE

"The Sense of an Ending"

Director: Ritesh Batra
Stars: Jim Broadbent, Harriet Walker

How do you film an unfilmable novel? Pack it silly with great English actors! Tackling Julian Barnes' 2011 award-gobbler is a fool's errand, with its unreliable narrator and gradually parsed-out backstory and flashbacks that may or may not be on the level. Alain Resnais would have nailed it. Ritesh Batra ("The Lunchbox") does not, but he puts in a solid effort. It's not just the casting agent who deserves credit; Batra and screenwriter Nick Payne work hard to retain the subtlety and fuzzy nuances of the source, ensuring something more complex than seen in its groaning trailer.

Jim Broadbent is at peak powers as an anti-social curmudgeon prompted by an acquaintance's death to recall his wild youth of heartache and selfish destruction. "Ending" is being sold as a typical English middlebrow bonanza, and sometimes it plays that way. But more often than not it stays messy, not reductive. It's messy in less charitable ways, too, yet it's still a procession of great scenes with great actors, in particular Harriet Walker as our hero's ex-wife. Called on to perform the unenviable task of sitting there as Broadbent tells her about his past — cue epic flashback blocks! — she helps make these potentially thumb-twiddling scenes flirty, lively and funny. (Charlotte Rampling, as the older version of an old flame, is also at her cagey best.) And yet, of course it has no idea how to end. MP

Jim Broadbent plays an aging divorcee who reflects on his life in "The Sense of an Ending." CBS FILMS

Tony Goldwyn plays one of '80s employees who have to kill each other in "The Belko Experiment." ORION PICTURES

"The Belko Experiment"

Director: Greg McLean
Stars: John Gallagher Jr., Tony Goldwyn

The office drones trapped inside their corporate high-rise in "The Belko Experiment" have no clue why their mystery captors want them to kill each other. But the filmmakers' motivation isn't hard to parse: They just want to make heads explode real good. It's not an ignoble goal, even if channelling the Stanford Prison Experiment just to make body parts go boom seems pointlessly complicated, not to mention sadistic to anyone expecting something brainier. It's like a first-rate mathematician working on a convoluted equation that in end will show how to make fart noises.

It starts off witty, anyway: The staffers at a generic company learn that all their mindless, seemingly pointless busywork really didn't serve any purpose after all. They were employed only so one day they would all be locked inside, instructed over intercom to go battle royale until only one is left. Should anyone not play ball, little bombs planted in the back of their heads will go off.

Our heroes are thus faced with a moral conundrum, and we the audience will learn something bleak or inspiring (or both) about human nature. Except we don't learn anything. Written by "Guardians of the Galaxy's" James Gunn and directed by "Wolf Creek" sadist Greg McLean, it muddles through its plot and barely takes advantage of its premise. The good and the bad split in predictable ways: Of course the big wigs, led by classic go-to yuppie creep Tony Goldwyn, quickly take a liking to mowing down their staff. That might be accurate but it's certainly not creative.

What it lacks in thought "Belko" tries to make up for in bloody kills. It's not all about head trauma, though Gunn and McLean don't even take much advantage of their setting. There's an entire building of boring office supplies, and yet the only object turned into a weapon is a tape dispenser. "Belko" stocks itself with old school character actors — like John C. McGinley and Michael Rooker — and assorted randos (John Gallagher Jr., Melonie Diaz), hoping that their personalities will make up for all the interchangeable, un-care-about-able characters.

But good or bad, rich or poor, recognizable or not, they are all equally dispensable in "Belko." This never had to be deep; it's an exploitation movie. But the best exploitation movies slip in heady ideas amidst the trash. John Carpenter would have killed this. MATT PRIGGE

"Beauty and the Beast"

Director: Bill Condon
Stars: Emma Watson, Dan Stevens

As far as powerfully inessential movies go, the recent live-action Disney remakes have been shockingly watchable. "Cinderella," "The Jungle Book" and the new "Beauty and the Beast" aren't wildly imaginative reworkings of animated classics. They're the cinematic equivalent of a cover band. They're the Dread Zeppelin or The Bootleg Beatles of the movies, hitting all the same old story beats and redoing all the beloved moments, only with real flesh-and-blood people instead of hand-drawn wonders. The movies are so lavishly, lovingly made you can almost ignore that they have no reason to exist beyond making money.

And so now we get "Beauty and the Beast," in which one of the studio's finest achievements — the first animated film ever nominated for Best Picture, of only three — is turned into a handsome but ultimately so-so cover. The song, as they say, remains the same: Emma Watson's Belle is interred in the castle of a hideous man-monster, played by Dan Stevens under copious makeup and CGI, his natural baritone lowered with what sounds like the device kidnappers use to distort their voices when calling the police. They fall in love.

Why, yes, that's "Downton Abbey's" Dan Stevens as the man-monster in the live-action remake of "Beauty and the Beast." DISNEY

Like the original — and the magical 1950 version by Jean Cocteau, still the "Beast" to beat — the romance is strong enough to overpower the skeezy Stockholm syndrome plot. He's the one who changes, not her, and Stevens plays him as a pathetic man-child touchingly embarrassed that a pretty lady is there to see him slurp soup. There's a lot to recommend here, but also far too many conceptual flaws. Ewan McGregor is terribly charming as the spastic, ostentatiously French-accented candelabra-man Lumiere, but the photo-realism means you can barely see his face. He's a bouncing piece of CGI metal with the voice of Ewan McGregor emanating from somewhere.

And strong as Watson makes Belle as a character, she's no Paige O'Hara, who voiced the original. Watson's singing voice is thin and reedy; she makes Emma Stone sound like Adele. Wonderful as musicals are and however great it would be if they were a thing again, Hollywood right now is rusty at them. The song-and-dance numbers tend to be leaden and ever-so-slightly off-rhythm, as though the dancers' feet kept getting stuck in molasses. Luckily there's a superior film you can watch instead with the same story, characters and songs. MP

Bubbles and Beauty

Looking for a way to escape the winter drudgery? On March 23, DivaGirl Philly is hosting Bubbles and Beauty at WeWork in Northern Liberties from 6-8 p.m. The company is dedicated to female empowerment and hosts many seminars, workshops and special events to help women expand their networks and be their best selves.

At Bubbles and Beauty, guests will sip on champagne, learn how to live a healthier life and get schooled in makeup from a Hollywood makeup artist. Attendees will also receive a gift bag filled with beauty samples.

This event is more than skin deep, however. There will be a discussion about the ingredients used in different makeup products and how they affect your health. Information will also be available about how to get involved with making changes to laws in terms what companies can put in products. ASHLEY PASKILL

At the Barnes' latest exhibit, everyone plays the part of the "casual observer."

JESSICA SMITH
letters@metro.us

Performance artist Pope.L's digital video, "The Great White Way, 22 miles, 9 years, 1 street," is on display at the Barnes for "Person of the Crowd." PROVIDED

Taking art to the streets, "Person of the Crowd: The Contemporary Art of Flanerie" at the Barnes Foundation explores casual observance as an art form, establishing both artists and visitors as spectators.

Ushered in by French Impressionists and defined by Edgar Allan Poe and Charles Baudelaire in the mid-1800s, the Flanerie movement became the archetype of the modern metropolitan experience with artists and writers paying acute attention to their surroundings and navigating their respective cities for inspiration.

"It's this idea of wandering to expose oneself to unplanned aspects of a newly modern city," explains exhibition curator Thom Collins. "Artists were looking for a strategy that would help them engage with life outside of the studio."

Featuring the work of more than 50 artists from around the world, "Person of the Crowd" embodies this spirit with interactive pieces that make city streets come to life and some that address issues such as gentrification, gender politics, globalization, racism and homelessness.

Another key feature is the exhibit's robust roster of female and minority artists, groups that were excluded from the flaneur movement in the 19th century.

"This is a new phenomenon where women and people of color have the time, freedom and liberty to go out in the world and participate in this activity," says Collins. "We wanted to focus especially on their work for a representative show."

Hosting outdoor projects, the exhibit transitions seamlessly into the spring season with guided walking tours; citywide street posters by Allan Espiritu, Christy Rupp and Jenny Holzer; and billboards by the feminist activist group the Guerrilla Girls. Upcoming street performances by Ayana Evans, Sanford Biggers, Tania Bruguera, Zachary Gabri and Wilmer Wilson IV are scheduled through the exhibit's run.

One of the most popular "Person of the Crowd" attributes, New York City artist Man Bartlett's multimedia piece "We Are / We See / We Hear" investigates the idea of "cyberflanerie."

"There's an argument that people are having the same kind of experiences in cyberspace that they used to have by going out and wandering in the streets," says Collins. "You can encounter all kinds of unexpected, novel information, ideas and images at your own pace and leisure."

Inviting the public to participate via social media using the hashtag #PersonoftheCrowd, the work is projected onto the ceiling of the Barnes Foundation's Annenberg Court with audible descriptions. Everything is available online at personofthecrowd.org.

"Describing the show is one thing, but experiencing it — you immediately get it," says Collins.

Catch a future NBA top three pick in Lonzo Ball when he makes his NCAA Tournament debut Friday. GETTY IMAGES

1 No. 7 Michigan vs. No. 10 Oklahoma State at 12:15 p.m. on CBS

Before last week, this matchup of two mostly underperforming Power Five conference teams would not have deserved much attention. However, that all changed as the Wolverines' (24-11) chartered plane skidded off the runway when they were en-route to the Big Ten Tournament in Brooklyn (yes, grandpa, you read that right). The Wolverines played their first game versus Illinois in their practice jerseys and from there, they won four games in four days to capture an unlikely Big Ten title.

2 No. 3 Oregon vs. No. 14 Iona at 2 p.m. on TBS

If you are a fan of points in a college basketball game, which is far from a given these days, you'll want to check out this one (gambling hint: take the over). The Ducks (29-5) and Gaels (22-12) can both fill it up, as they say. Before center Chris Boucher tore his ACL in the Pac 12 Tournament, Oregon was viewed by many as a national title contender. They could still make a run in the NCAA Tournament but it will be hard without their long shot-blocker. The Ducks do have junior small forward Dillon Brooks (16.3 points per game) though who is probably the most clutch player in the country.

3 No. 6 Creighton vs. No. 11 Rhode Island at 4:30 p.m. on TBS

The Rams (24-9) are making their first NCAA Tournament appearance since 1999 and they are a popular upset pick since they won the Atlantic 10 Tournament and come in riding an eight-game win streak. Head coach Dan Hurley's team is led by high-scoring point guard E.C. Matthews (14.9 points per game). The Blue Jays (25-9) lost to Villanova (31-3) in the Big East championship game and their former point guard Maurice Watson Jr. was felled by a torn ACL during the regular season, otherwise they'd be seeded even higher.

4 No. 7 Dayton vs. No. 10 Wichita State at 7:10 p.m. on CBS

No team has a more legitimate beef with the NCAA Tournament committee than the Shockers (30-4), since year after year they get terrible draws (both in terms of seeding and potential opponents). Las Vegas knows it is a joke since the Flyers (24-7) are a whopping six-point underdog in this matchup. The winner will likely face No. 2 seed Kentucky (29-5) in the Round of 32, some reward for another stellar season by the Missouri Valley champions.

5 No. 3 UCLA vs. No. 14 Kent State at 9:57 p.m. on TruTV

Putting aside all of the insane verbal diarrhea constantly coming from his overbearing father (Lavar Ball), Bruins (29-4) point guard Lonzo Ball (14.6 points per game, 7.7 assists per game and 6.1 rebounds per game) is a special kind of talent that could both lead UCLA to an NCAA championship in his freshman season and then be the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft this June (by the Celtics?).

Temple women's hoop squad hopes to make deep run as No. 7 NCAA seed

Can the Owls do some damage in the Bridgeport region?

JEFF MCMENAMIN
@Jeff_McMenamin
sports@metro.us

How deep can the Owls run in their first NCAA Tournament appearence in half a decade? GETTY IMAGES

For the first time since 2011, the Temple Lady Owls (24-7) are dancing.

Led by a fearsome foursome of Feyond Fitzgerald (17.3 points, 7.8 assists), Aliya Butts (15.1 points), Donnaizha Fountain (14.1 points, 7.5 rebounds) and Tanya Atkinson (13.1 points), the No. 7 seeded Owls are deep offensively and look poised for a run in the Bridgeport region.

"This is what we've been waiting for," Fitzgerald said. "We worked hard during the summer, we worked hard during the year. It's been a great year for us. This is the best senior season I could ever ask for."

The Owls are set to face No. 10 Oregon (20-13) in their first round matchup at 6:35 p.m. Saturday on ESPN2. The Ducks have some impressive wins on their résumé over ranked opponents in No. 24 Michigan State, No. 20 Cal and No. 15 UCLA earlier in the season and will surely be a tough task in round one.

It's up to Temple coach Tonya Cardoza, now in her fourth NCAA appearance, to improve upon her 2-1 tournament record in the first round and help the Owls advance.

"We don't know much about Oregon, but I know they play in the Pac 12," Cardoza said. "They're a really good program and we're excited for them."

A pair of freshman in Ruthy Hebard (14.5 points, 8.5 rebounds) and Sabrina Ionescu (14.3 points, 6.6 rebounds) have served as the engines to Oregon's offense this season and it will be up to the Owls' veteran leadership to lock them down on the defensive end.

Cardoza's team, who was placed in the WNIT the past two seasons, thinks this may have been a bit of a reward by the selection committee.

"We've been so disappointed," Cardoza said. "Maybe they are trying to make up for it."

The winner of Saturday's game will face the winner of No. 2 Duke and No. 15 Hampton on Monday. If Duke advances, it will be somewhat of a home game for the Blue Devils as the game is being played in Durham, North Carolina.

Eagles scout Oklahoma's Joe Mixon, Youngstown State DEs at pro days

Would Joe Mixon be a good fit at running back for Philly? GETTY IMAGES

With the NFL draft just over a month away, the Eagles and their scouts have been scurrying all across the country to collect every piece of information possible to help them properly assemble their draft board.

A few key players got looks from Howie Roseman's staff midweek this week, as the Eagles were one of 12 teams at Oklahoma's pro day to watch controversial running back Joe Mixon (who had some off the field issues when he assaulted a woman in 2014).

"We want to get all the information," Roseman told 97.5 The Fanatic Thursday. "Then we'll make the decision whether to put him on our draft board or not."

Mixon, who has drawn comparisons to Steelers' Le'Veon Bell, was a redshirt sophomore last season and ran for 1,274 yards and 10 touchdowns. Most mock drafts project him as a third round pick.

The Eagles also were in Ohio to focus on their defense, scouting two talented defensive ends at Youngstown State.

According to reports, assistant defensive line coach Phillip Daniels watched Derek Rivers and Avery Moss work out. Each is expected to me a middle-round pick. The Eagles find themselves suddenly a big short on defensive linemen after the departures of Bennie Logan and Connor Barwin this offseason.

Philly also was one of a handful of teams at Penn State's pro day, prompting many to believe Chris Godwin, a wide receiver whose stock is rising, could be on their radar. EVAN MACY

Eagles still looking to draft receiver

Are the Eagles targeting Chris Godwin, Dede Westbrook or another mid-tier wideout?

LUKE MILLER
@LukeFM7
sports@metro.us

In light of last week's free agent feast, it is finally possible to discuss the Eagles needs without early mention of wide receiver. That is fantastic news, but don't make the mistake of thinking it removes receiver from positions of interest in the draft, even in the first round.

We've already committed coverage to the top of the class: John Ross, Corey Davis, and Mike Williams, and this article will be focused on delving for deeper finds at the position, but first: the argument for still spending a top pick on a receiver.

For all the promise in the signings of Alshon Jeffery and Torrey Smith, there are concerns. Jeffery hasn't gotten on the field enough to eclipse the 1,000-yard mark since 2014, and Miles Austin and Rueben Randle were both twice as productive in the seasons before they joined the Eagles as Smith was last season in San Francisco.

That doesn't make these bad deals — but one of the best features of both is that if either player is a bust the Eagles aren't committed to them beyond 2016. At least for Jeffery though, that works both ways. Jordan Matthews being in the final year of his rookie contract (making just $1.6 million) and trade rumors make it appear the Eagles are at least entertaining the idea of a 2018 without him. There's a hypothetical 2018 receiving group that looks all too familiar. So receiver remains a need.

And while cornerback may be the biggest need, it's looking more and more like — despite a glut of talent being graded around the first-second round border — one will not be the best player available at pick 14. Marshon Lattimore should be gone. Sidney Jones tore his Achilles at Washington's pro day. Teez Tabor had a disappointing combine,

Lastly, the Eagles have been scouting these top receiver prospects all season. If they fell in love with any of them, the Brandin Cooks saga is proof enough how loathe Howie Roseman and crew will be to let go of a player they've set their minds on.

Among players likely to hear their names called early on the second day of the draft, we touched last week on Penn State's Chris Godwin's excellent combine. Now ranked fifth among receivers in the draft by CBS Sports, Godwin was watched at Penn State's pro day Thursday by the Eagles. Staying in the Big Ten, Ohio State's Curtis Samuel (5-foot-11, 196 pounds) had 771 yards rushing and 865 receiving in 2016. His versatility may be his downfall and it's slightly disturbing to see NFL.com list his NFL comparison as Josh Huff.

Chris Godwin had a standout combine and could be on the Eagles' radar. GETTY IMAGES

On the back of that comparison, probably the last receiver you need to hear about is another one from Southern Cal, but JuJu Smith-Schuster is one to watch. He played alongside Nelson Agholor as a freshman in 2014 (and maybe that could help both players) before establishing himself as USC's number one receiving option with 1,454 yards as a sophomore. He's been banged up from time to time but at 6-foot-1, 215, knows how to snatch the ball away from corners.

A little further down the draft, keep an eye on Oklahoma's Dede Westbrook (6-foot, 178.) The Eagles interviewed Westbrook at the combine, where he chose not to run the 40-yard dash. Less than a week later however, he turned in a 4.34 time at his pro day. Speed is Westbrook's game; after transferring from junior college he finished 2016 with 1,524 yards and 17 touchdowns. There were domestic violence charges leveled against Westbrook in the past, and though he was never convicted, sharing his college team with running back Joe Mixon may increase some teams' scrutiny.

Another receiver the Eagles have been checking out is Texas A&M's Josh Reynolds (6-foot-3, 194.) Reynolds was Second-Team All-SEC after a senior season with 1,039 yards and 12 touchdowns. Two of those scores came from 90-plus yards away from the end zone, which is not too shabby. While the Eagles hope Torrey Smith will stretch the field vertically, it can't hurt to add receivers late in the draft who can do the same, and Reynolds is one.

Another who could be available late on the third and final day is Baylor's K.D. Cannon, who hung around after Baylor's turbulent off-season to finish his career with 87 catches for 1,215 yards and 13 touchdowns. Like it is for Westbrook, competition in the Big-12 is a bit of a concern for receivers. His 4.41 forty at the combine shows Cannon's speed lives up to his name, however.

Aries Look over contracts, deals or professional options that can change your life. Negotiate on your own behalf. Don't let frustration turn into anger.

Taurus Go where the action is. Being a part of what's going on at work or in your community will keep you informed of any opportunities that might interest you.

Gemini You'll be surprised by the way others handle matters. Don't leave anything to chance. If you want something done your way, you must do it yourself.

Cancer Charm your way in and out of situations. Show steady progress and the desire to finish what you start. Walk away from anyone who is a bad influence.

Leo Don't rock the boat when dealing with domestic issues. Someone will be ready to face off with you if you aren't willing to compromise. Choose your battles wisely.

Virgo If you give others a chance to share their thoughts, you will find workable solutions. Your input will result in popularity and greater control.

Libra An interesting concept will grab your attention. Put more effort into using your skills more effectively. An interesting proposal will catch you by surprise.

Scorpio Socialize with the movers and shakers to fast-track your way to greater popularity and opportunities. A little romance and passion will improve your personal life.

Sagittarius Protect personal secrets and private dealings. Don't indulge in gossip or meddle in other people's affairs. Stay focused on your life and your loved ones.

Capricorn An unusual opportunity will arise. Don't miss out on something exciting just because someone is being demanding and taking up your time. Stay focused.

Aquarius Sit back and listen. The undertone in someone's voice will tell you volumes about what to expect. Stay on top of any dealings that affect your assets.

Pisces Take a look at contracts or investments to find a way to raise your income. Participate in events that are geared toward helping people achieve success. EUGENIA LAST
